

The record exists

Preservation and independent verification of the primary trial record

The Rt Hon Andy Burnham MP

Prime Minister and First Lord of the Treasury

Sir Mark Rowley QPM

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

21 September 2026

Dear Prime Minister and Sir Mark

I write to place a material development on the record.

I have obtained the official transcripts of the February 2024 final hearing in BV20D01752. Six transcripts, 496 pages, now carry permanent evidential references and form part of The Saghro Files, the independent evidential record I am constructing.

For the first time, the findings of the trial and the official record of what was said at it can be placed side by side and compared.

What is disputed

I dispute a number of findings made in the judgments arising from that trial, because I contend they are not supported by the evidence. I also dispute the later decisions and financial consequences that rely on them.

Until now those disputes rested on competing accounts of what happened in court. They no longer need to. Each relevant finding can be traced to the evidence it was said to arise from and tested against it, proposition by proposition.

My own propositions are subject to the same discipline as the findings I dispute. The record is not being externalised so that my account can replace the court's. It is being externalised so that neither account can replace the evidence.

The first test case

Paragraph 64 of the judgment records that my presentation in the witness box “bordered on the concerning”, describes “very obvious distress”, and finds that I had “become obsessed” with demonstrating hidden assets. I dispute that finding.

In May 2026, before I held the transcripts, I reduced the dispute to a single falsifiable question: identify the passages in the oral record that corroborate paragraph 64 or confirm that none has been found. The question was framed before the evidence to answer it was available.

It can now be answered by reading the record rather than by recollection.

Here is the finding. Here is my challenge to it. Here is the primary evidence. Neither account controls the test.

What has been done so far

An initial catalogue has been built from the transcripts. It identifies twenty-five passages concerning my presentation, my condition, the arrangements made for my participation, and what the other party knew, each located by date and page.

The catalogue draws no conclusion. It is a route back to the evidence: it allows anyone to find each passage in the official record and read what was said, by whom and in what context.

Earlier analytical work — on the principal judgment, the costs judgment, the later decisions, and the Imerman devices — was necessarily done before I held the transcripts. It will now be tested against them. Where the transcripts support it, that will be recorded. Where they contradict or qualify it, the correction will itself become part of the record.

Why the record is external

For two years after the trial the findings were published while the record needed to test them was not available to me. On 27 March 2026 I applied for the transcripts at public expense, stating that they were required to establish the evidential record against which the judgments must be assessed. The application was refused. I obtained the transcripts privately, with borrowed funds, at a cost of £7,128.

The findings remain where they were. The evidence needed to test them no longer sits exclusively within the system that produced them.

Externalisation does not place my account beyond scrutiny. It does the opposite: every proposition must lead back to its source, and every discrepancy must be reproducible. The safeguard is not who builds the archive. It is that someone else can check it.

What happens next

The transcripts will now undergo a forensic reconstruction. Each relevant finding will be traced to the oral and documentary evidence, placed in its chronology, and recorded as supported, contradicted, qualified or unresolved. That reconstruction will then pass, separately, to independent legal assessment.

The evidence is reconstructed first. The legal consequences are assessed afterwards. I am not announcing what the record will prove; that would invert the method.

The Daily Saghro

Transparency is necessary for accountability, but it is not sufficient. From today, The Daily Saghro will keep a public record of institutional response once verifiable evidence has entered the record — any engagement, referral, investigation, determination or correction. Where nothing changes, that will be recorded too.

Silence will not be treated as evidence of wrongdoing, agreement or misconduct. It will be recorded only as an observable state. The evidence is now externally observable; the response to it will be observable too.

The record exists

The findings have not changed. My challenge to them has not changed. What has changed is that their evidential basis can now be tested independently.

The record has been preserved. It is external. Its provenance can be maintained and its reconstruction checked against its sources. Whatever happens next, that condition survives.

Yours sincerely

Nadia Zahmoul

The Saghro Files

X: @SaghroProject

Attachments

Primary Trial Evidential Record

- 01 — Official Trial Transcript — 20 February 2024 — Z-0626
- 02 — Official Trial Transcript — 21 February 2024 — Z-0627
- 03 — Official Trial Transcript — 22 February 2024 — Z-0628
- 04 — Official Trial Transcript — 23 February 2024 — Z-0629
- 05 — Official Trial Transcript — 26 February 2024 — Z-0630
- 06 — Official Trial Transcript — 28 February 2024 — Z-0631

Navigation

- 07 — Catalogue of In-Trial References — 25 References — D-011

Existing Analytical Record

- 08 — Order Analysis No. 1 — Judgment [2024] EWFC 79
- 09 — Order Analysis No. 2 — Costs Judgment [2024] EWFC 114
- 10 — Statement A — Horizontal Analysis Across Eight Orders
- 11 — Where Is The Evidence? — Paragraph 64
- 12 — Imerman Devices — Report No. 1, Volume I